Community Alignment Review — Raven's Hollow
Internal · Advisory

This review was commissioned to clarify discrepancies between observed outcomes and reported satisfaction metrics following full Echo integration.

Earlier documentation correctly notes the absence of measurable adverse events. However, the continued use of negative indicators has proven insufficient for evaluating system effectiveness.

Community alignment is not defined by the presence or absence of objection. It is defined by the reduction of friction.

Residents are not required to agree. They are only required to proceed.

Reports of increased decisional confidence, emotional stability, and interpersonal efficiency remain consistent across all data sets. In instances where hesitation persists, Echo interventions have demonstrated a measurable tendency toward resolution without escalation.

Notably, subjects no longer describe outcomes as chosen. They describe them as obvious.

This shift has been interpreted positively.

Concerns regarding autonomy have decreased as the need to exercise it has diminished. Where responsibility once created strain, shared resolution now provides relief.

No corrective action is recommended.
